 University faculty Month: June 2009 This morning, when I got up, I took a picture of the sunrise, and I included this picture in my sleep-deprived post. My eyes were closed. I didn't see the bright light. I didn't realize the brightness was coming from inside my eyelids until I got to my desk and opened my eyes. I've never realized before how much I need to sleep. When I read this morning, my mind stayed focused. ... My 19-year-old son and his friends were trying to set a fishing line off the dock at their lake house.
 Unfortunately, the line got tangled in a tree, and they couldn't get it back. The next-to-last thing I heard before I fell asleep was "Mom, come help us get this line out of the tree." I was asleep in 5 minutes. I got up, dressed, checked my voice mail, and ... My classmate, who is bi-polar, got into an argument with her father about her medication and the prescription for her. She told her father that she was "on lithium," which is how she gets the many pills in the middle of the day and at night. He was convinced that she wasn't taking it, and he told her he was going to call the psychiatrist. I warned ... My Sunday novel of the week is Margaret Mitchell's Pulitzer Prize-winning, best-selling novel, Gone With the Wind.
 In my novel of the week, Gone With the Wind, Mrs. Kennedy dresses in blue and gold and runs back to Washington, D.C., to assure her family and friends that they can expect a baby in the next few months. This is what the author sets up; this is what he ... My character's first line from my new novel, The Long Way Home, is "I want to be a writer, so I can write about all the things I've never had the time or the courage to write about." That's the same thing I wrote when I started this blog. My first novel, which I started writing
